7. JOHN: He's a personal friend of General Eisenhower's...and He'll tell us something about the General too! So...let's hear the true story of Food in France...from NBC War Correspondent Merrill Mueller!

8. MUELLER: In the past few months, you've heard a good many contradictory stories about the food situation in France.
First you've heard that all France is starving...and again you've heard that there has been a big harvest, and plenty to eat for everybody.

Now the truth about that...is this:

The French farmer and his family does have enough to eat.

They're healthy. The harvest was good this year. The Germans didn't destroy the farms during their occupation, because, of course, they wanted the food for themselves.

When we invaded Normandy last summer, we were astonished at the rich fields of grain; the lush vegetables; and the herds of healthy cattle!

"Why...France has plenty to eat!"...was the word flashed back to America.

And then we marched into the cities!

That was a different story.

In the cities of France this winter, people are starving.

They are starving because the transportation system in France is smashed. The food can't move from the farms into the cities.

First, the railroads were blown up when we invaded. During those dark days of Invasion, nothing moved in France. No food could move from the farms on freight cars...nor trucks...nor wagons.

It's a personal friend of General Eisenhower's...and that's us something about the General too...it's hard to story of food in France...from the war...and that's MUELLER (CONT'D): Then, when the Germans retreated, they blasted more railroads and highways. Only now, and slowly, is the food beginning to trickle back into the city markets. But it's a pains taking process. Little by little the railroads are being rebuilt. A few trucks grind along the roads...trucks lent to the French by the Americans and the British. Here and there, a wagon carries food to the cities. But it's a pitifully small amount...and...here's the saddest thing of all...in spite of all the authorities can do...the best of this food is still finding its way into the Black Market. The Black Market takes its toll mainly...on the poor people in France.

PAUSE:

9. MARIE: (FRENCH ACCENT...WHISPERS) The black market! Paul! You got that steak from the black market!
10. PAUL: (FRENCH) But Marie! What is the disgrace? We can't starve, can we? We are poor people...and if we are able to save up enough sous to buy a steak, we deserve it, don't we?
11. MARIE: But Paul...the black market!
12. PAUL: Listen, Marie...today I saw a rich man go in and buy tobacco. And two steaks! And what looked to me like real coffee...although I couldn't be sure! He had too much money, that man. Everybody stared at him, and we wondered...you know...how he got so wealthy. Something was suspicious about him.
13. MARIE: Yes...but...
14. PAUL: Well...he is the one they are after. The rich man who keeps the black market going...who keeps the food away from the poor! But not us, Marie...not us! Because we have to buy what we can...when we can. That's the only way we can get a good meal!
15. MARIE: And save for a month to get it...

16. PAUL: But wait until spring, Marie! Perhaps by then things will be different...and the railroads will run again. We are a rich country, Marie! Remember that! In France there is plenty to eat!
17. MUELLER: Yes, in France, there is plenty to eat. But today in Paris, a steak dinner is about $75.00. I'll tell you a story. A very good friend of mine in Paris wanted to give me a dinner party. He didn't believe in dealing with the black market...but this was to be something special...a dinner party for five of us. Here's what we had. For hors d'oeuvres, we had radishes and onions. I remember I supplied a can of anchovies, which I got in a Christmas box. Worth $10.00 on the black market, incidentally. Then we had thin soup, steak and potatoes, a tiny piece of bread; ersatz coffee. For the five of us that dinner cost $161.00. And that is a lavish meal in Paris today. Now, they're doing what they can to curb the black market. Our own Military Police are helping the French gendarmes. Little by little, the situation is improving. But stern measures have necessarily been taken. I was in a restaurant not long ago, and the manager came out and began nailing up a sign. There was a G. I. at the next table, trying to make out what the sign said...because he couldn't believe his eyes.....and he called out "hey, mister...what's that sign say?"
18. MANAGER: (FRENCH ACCENT) "Danser!" Don't you know what that is?
19. SOUND: (HAMMERING)
20. G.I.: Sure...it means to dance...but what about it...what's the sign say?
21. MANAGER: In your country...you would say "No Dancing". That's what the sign means..."No Dancing".
22. G.I.: You mean you don't allow dancing in here any more?

got wait until spring, later! Perhaps by then things will be different...and the railroad will run again. We are a rich country, later! Remember that! In France there is plenty to eat!

Yes, in France, there is a lot to eat. But today in Berlin, a good dinner is about $75.00. I'll tell you a story. A very good friend of mine in Paris wanted to give me a dinner party. He didn't believe in dealing with the black market... He was so he expected... a dinner party for five of us. Here's what we had. Not a lot of conversation, no hot vegetables and onions. I remember I got a lot of satisfaction, which I got from a Christmas tree. With $10.00 in the black market, that's all. Then we had water, soup, and potatoes, a tiny bit of... organic coffee. The idea of us that it was good and that it was a lot of work in Berlin today. Now, they're taking a lot of things to come from the black market. Our own little party... and I got a lot of satisfaction from it. By little, the... in the morning. But... and... was in a... and the... and the... and the... one was... to... it could... it... and he called out "hey, what's that sign?"

(UNKNOWN SPEAKER) "Remember!" Don't you know what that is?

(HAMMERING)

Sure... it means to dance... but what about it... what's the story?

In your country... you would say "no dancing". That's what the sign means... "no dancing".

You know you don't like it...

23. MANAGER: In here? In here? It is not my law. It is the law of France.
All over the country, no one is allowed to dance.
24. SOUND: FINAL HAMMERING OF LAST WORDS
25. G. I.: Hey wait a minute. I don't get it!
26. MANAGER: Yes...it's another law to stop the black market. People come to black market restaurants to dance. While they are there, they buy black market meals. If you forbid people to dance, they think, "oh well why should I pay all that money for dinner, if there is no dancing!" So...black market restaurants are forced to close!
27. G.I.: Well...I'll be...
28. MANAGER: Yes, indeed, M'sieur. It is another little law...but who knows... it may help...(FADE)...it may help....
29. MUELLER: And that's the law in France. No dancing anywhere. Enforcement of this and other laws are helping the fight against the black market.

And now maybe you're wondering what the average Frenchman gets to eat....under his regular ration privileges. Nearly everything is rationed in France. A person is allowed only one piece of meat a week, and that's about the size of a small lamb chop.

Potatoes are rationed and scarce.

There is no tea. And all coffee is ersatz.

Their flour is a mixture of white and wheat flour...and believe it or not...wood pulp.

The United States, however, is sending big shipments of flour into France...pure flour, enriched with vitamins. French bread is now much better, naturally, without the wood pulp. People have to stand in line, though, to buy bread...which, of course, is rationed.

MUELLER (CONT'D) As for French pastries...you don't see them anywhere. Bakers bravely continue to make fancy breads...but there's no cream for the delicate, colorful pastries France is famous for.

Milk, incidentally, is extremely scarce, and most of what's available goes to children in hospitals.

Now a couple more things about what the French are eating. They have a fair supply of cabbages...some fresh fruit...but that all depends, as I said, on transportation. One day there'll be quite a good supply of food on the market...when some trucks get through. Then for days after, the shelves will be bare.

A big day, though...is the day that a shipment of American chocolate gets to town. The storekeepers rush out and paint in huge letters across their windows..."Chocolate American!"

"American Chocolate!" And in a couple of minutes the store is a madhouse. Chocolate, always a favorite with the French, is more so now...because it provides real nourishment, with the milk and sugar it contains.

It's sold only to mothers with children, though. In other words, it has to come out of the family ration book.

And the French ration system! That's a story in itself. We think our system here is complicated! The French have three types of ration books. One for an individual person; one for the family, and another supplement for children. And when you go into a restaurant, you of course have to turn in coupons for your dinner. They're very strict about that, too. You'll say....

30. WOMAN: Garcon! Please I would like another teaspoon of sugar in my coffee!

31. GARCON: Oui, Madame! Certainly, Madame! And that will be another ration coupon out of your book, s'il vous plait!

...you don't get it anywhere. ...

32. MUELLER: No...it's no joke...getting a good meal in a French city. When you consider that the average Frenchman makes about $65.00 a month...and one good steak dinner might cost him $75.00 on the black market...you get an idea what the problem is.

I have noticed, though, that even though his meals are more meagre than ever, the Frenchman still likes to take the usual two hours for his lunch!

Now let's see about the G. I.'s in France.

Of course, Army rations are good, as always. For instance, there's chicken every Sunday...and ice cream!

However, you take an item like a fresh egg...now that's hard to find. Dried eggs...sure, plenty of 'em! But even though the French chefs can make the most delicate, fluffy omelet with dried eggs and a few onions...our own G. I.'s will go a long way to find a fresh egg. And because of this...some beautiful friendships have blossomed between the American Infantryman and the French farmer. It will go something like this...

32A. FARMER: (FRENCH ACCENT) Hello, bonjour, Sammy.

33. G. I.: How're you, Andre. Say look, chum, how's every little thing in the hen-house these days.

34. FARMER: (CAGILY) Oh...comme ci, comme ca! Pretty good. Why?

35. G. I.: I want a couple of eggs...a couple of dozen if you've got 'em.

36. FARMER: Oui, Sammy, I have a few for you.

37. G.I.: Fine! Lead me to 'em. I'm counting on a 24 egg omelet for dinner when I get back to camp.

38. FARMER: (HALTING) Oh, Sammy, I must tell you...because of this and that... I find I have to raise the price a little bit...

39. G. I.: (WARNING) Oh no you don't...

40. FARMER: Only five cents...your money...

...this is no joke... getting a good meal in a French city...
...consider that the average Frenchman makes about $55.00 a month... and one good steak dinner might cost him $10.00... on the other hand... you get an idea what the problem is.

I have noticed, though, that even though his work is very heavy than ever, the Frenchman still has a lot of time for his two hours for his family.

Now let's see about the U.S. in France.
Of course, my opinion is that, in general, it is better there's nothing very good about it.

However, let's see in the U.S. in France... that's what we are trying to do... a lot of work is being done... the French people are very busy... they are not very happy...

41. G. I.: Look, Andre, that's a quarter an egg. Twenty cents is my bottom price! What else are you going to do with 'em. You haven't any trucks. You can't get 'em moved off your place...

42. FARMER: Yes, Sammy, you are right...but...

43. G. I.: Twenty cents an egg. No more!

44. FARMER: (LAUGH) When an American soldier can beat a Frenchman at a bargain...that's a good one! Here you are! Two dozen eggs.

45. G. I.: Thanks, Pal. That's four bucks eighty. What an omelet! Two dozen eggs...fresh eggs! And they're all...for...me!

46. MUELLER: Yes...the G. I.'s strike a good bargain.

And the French farmer is delighted, of course. He usually can't sell a good deal of his food, because of the lack of transportation. So he's glad to have a windfall market...from the G.I. Joes!

I've heard soldiers say that a can of C Ration will buy half a cow. This process of bargaining, highly perfected among the soldiers in France, is known as "scrounging". Scrounging is a fair practice. Our soldier doesn't swipe from the farmers.

He bargains. And if he wants something, and it's there for him...he's certainly one guy who deserves it!

Incidentally...about General Eisenhower. The General eats exactly the same ration as any officer there. Nothing is specially prepared for him. But there are two things he likes to eat more than anything else...and these two things he can't get anywhere in France. One is hominy...just plain hominy, not grits. And the other is Virginia sugar-cured ham. So...I'm out now "scrounging" a ham and some hominy for General Ike...to take with me when I go back to France.

...and the ...

MUELLER (CONT'D) Well...to sum up, now...about the food situation over there. Right now, though there is food in the country, the cities are suffering from hunger. Transportation, badly damaged, is being repaired slowly. And...as a matter of fact, most all transportation available has had to carry fuel. The country has had a severe fuel shortage this winter. Many farms in France are idle because of a severe manpower shortage. However, France is getting ready to organize a Land Army of volunteer farm workers, like our Crop Corps here in this country. Then, too, many a Frenchman is getting out in his back yard and planting a Victory Garden!

ENGINEER: WATCH SWITCH COMING UP...12:28:30 PM- EWT....CUE IS UNDERLINED

MUELLER(CONT'D): So...there's progress every day in France...and the long tedious task of rebuilding is underway. But France doesn't want charity from her Allies. She needs some food from us right now...she needs help in rebuilding her transportation. But it's just a boost...to tide her over this critical period, and she'll be on her feet again. And that's the food situation in France today. This is Merrill Mueller returning you to Washington, D. C.

47. FREYMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Mueller. CONSUMER TIME friends, you have heard Merrill Mueller, NBC War Correspondent talking from New York, giving you the story of food in France. In a few days Mr. Mueller will return to General Eisenhower's headquarters overseas, and you will hear him again on NBC news broadcasts from Europe.

48. JOHN: And now, Mrs. Freyman, what have we scheduled next week on CONSUMER TIME?

49. FREYMAN: Next week, we're going to have as guest star...none other than that great radio comedian...Bob Burns!

50. JOHN: Bob Burns! And what's he going to talk about?
